

SERAVA - LINKEDIN + MEDIUM DAILY CALENDAR (MONTH 1)

Serava - LinkedIn + Medium Daily Calendar, Month 1

Serava - LinkedIn + Medium daily calendar
Month 1 · 20 weekday posts · post one each weekday, import one Medium guide each weekday

How to use this each weekday (about 10 minutes):

1. Copy that day's LinkedIn post and publish it from your Serava company page or your profile.

2. Screenshot the dark image card and attach it to the post (posts with an image get more reach).

3. Open medium.com/p/import, paste that day's Medium URL, and publish the imported guide.

That's it. LinkedIn post + Medium blog, every weekday. To save as PDF: Cmd-P → Save as PDF.

Weekday 1 · Mon

The businesses on BizBuySell are the leftovers.

Think about it. Someone spends 30 years building a profitable, durable business. When they finally sell, they take the best offer from someone they trust, usually a buyer who already reached out.

The ones that end up publicly listed are often the ones that did not sell that way.

The good deals are off-market by nature. The owner is not running a process. They are running a business. The only way you find that deal is to go to them first.

That is the whole skill. Pick an industry. Pull every company. Find the owners. Reach out before anyone else is in the conversation.

The listings are a competition. Off-market is a conversation. Spend your time where the conversation is.

#SearchFund #ETA #Acquisitions #SMB #DealSourcing
↓ screenshot this as the post image

The businesses on BizBuySell are the leftovers.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a quiet "Main Street" storefront photo (Unsplash search: "small business storefront").

Medium import today: how-to-find-off-market-businesses-to-buy.html

Weekday 2 · Tue

Most searchers fail at the same step. Not diligence. Not financing.

The list.

They find ten companies, email five, hear nothing, and stall.

Ten companies and five emails is not a pipeline. Three hundred owners contacted is a pipeline.

Reply rates on cold owner outreach are single digits even when you do it well. That number is not a reason to quit. It is the reason it works for the few who push through it.

Keep the top of the funnel full. That is the entire game.

What stopped you the last time you tried to source a deal?

#SearchFund #DealFlow #Acquisitions #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

Searchers fail at the list, not the deal.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a simple funnel diagram, or a photo of a long to-do list.

Medium import today: how-search-funds-find-companies.html

Weekday 3 · Wed
A 3% reply rate scares most people off.

Good. That is your moat.

Cold outreach to business owners replies in the low single digits, even when it is personalized. Most people see that and quit, or never start.

But run the math the other way. Contact 300 well-chosen owners in one niche and you will have ten real conversations no competitor is having.

The unglamorous, repetitive work is the edge precisely because almost nobody will do it.

The reward for boring is a pipeline nobody else has.

#Acquisitions #ColdOutreach #SearchFund #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

A 3% reply rate is not the obstacle. It is the moat.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a "1 of 300" visual, or a single lit window in a dark building.

Medium import today: what-is-proprietary-deal-flow.html

Weekday 4 · Thu
A company name is not a lead.

The owner, and a direct line to reach them, is a lead.

Most sourcing dies in that gap. People build a beautiful list of company names, then realize they have no idea who actually owns each one or how to reach them, and the momentum dies.

A generic info@ address is the weakest channel there is. You want the owner's direct email and phone.

The quality of your contact data sets the ceiling on your reply rate. Everything upstream of that is wasted if you cannot reach a human.

Get the owner. Then the list is worth something.

#DealSourcing #Acquisitions #SearchFund #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

A company name is not a lead. The owner is.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a phone or an email icon, or a contact card mockup.

Medium import today: how-to-find-business-owner-contact-info.html

Weekday 5 . Fri

The biggest opportunity in small business is a retirement party.

Roughly half of small business owners are 55 or older. A huge share have no successor. No kid taking over. No employee buying them out.

That is the largest transfer of small business ownership in history, happening right now, one quiet retirement at a time.

For most people it is a headline. For an acquirer it is the whole game.

Many of these owners care deeply who takes over what they built. A lot would rather sell to a real person than a faceless rollup.

The constraint is not supply. It is whether you are in the room before someone else.

#SilverTsunami #SMB #Acquisitions #SuccessionPlanning
↓ screenshot this as the post image

Half of small business owners are 55 or older.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: an older business owner in a workshop (Unsplash: "older business owner workshop").

Medium import today: how-to-find-succession-ready-businesses.html

Weekday 6 . Mon

Stop buying CRM software before you have a single deal.

I see it constantly. New acquirers spend their first month comparing DealCloud and 4Degrees, setting up pipelines, configuring stages for deals they do not have yet.

It feels like progress. It is not.

A CRM organizes deal flow you already have. It does not create it. An empty pipeline in perfect software is still an empty pipeline.

Order of operations: source first, reach out second, track third. A spreadsheet is fine until you have so many live conversations you lose track. That is a good problem, and it comes later.

Buy the tools that fill the funnel before the tools that organize it.

#Acquisitions #SearchFund #SMB #Sales
↓ screenshot this as the post image

Stop buying a CRM before you have a deal.

serava.ai

Alt image idea: an empty spreadsheet or an empty pipeline board.

Medium import today: best-free-deal-sourcing-tools.html

Weekday 7 . Tue

Two offers at the same price can be completely different deals.

New buyers obsess over the headline number. Experienced ones negotiate the structure.

A slightly higher price with a big seller note and a sensible earnout can be far better than a lower price you fund entirely with a bank loan and your savings.

Seller note: the seller gets paid over time, which lowers your cash at close and keeps them invested in a smooth handover.

Earnout: part of the price depends on the business hitting targets after close, which protects you if value could walk out the door.

Negotiate the terms, not just the price.

#Manda #Acquisitions #DealStructure #SMB

↓ screenshot this as the post image

Structure beats price. Almost every time.

serava.ai

Alt image idea: a handshake, or two contract documents side by side.

Medium import today: how-acquisition-financing-works.html

Weekday 8 . Wed

The best businesses to buy are boring.

HVAC. Plumbing. Accounting. Landscaping. Pest control.

Profitable, durable, unglamorous, and often owned by someone who will retire this decade. Demand does not disappear in a downturn. People still need their heat fixed and their taxes done.

The flashy businesses get all the buyers. The boring ones get bought by the people who understand that boring and durable is exactly the point.

Your buy box should be a sentence: an industry, a region, and the kind of owner you are looking for.

What is your buy box?

#SMB #Acquisitions #SearchFund #ETA #BuyBox

↓ screenshot this as the post image

The best businesses to buy are boring.

serava.ai

Alt image idea: an HVAC van or a plumber's truck (Unsplash: "hvac van").

Medium import today: how-to-find-and-buy-an-hvac-business.html

Weekday 9 . Thu

A valuation multiple is just a risk score.

Most small businesses sell for a multiple of earnings, often two to four times SDE for owner-run companies. But the same earnings are worth more when the business is less risky to own.

What pushes the multiple up:

- Recurring revenue, not one-off sales
- No single customer who can sink you
- A business that runs without the owner
- A stable history, not a recent spike
- Clean books

The opposite pushes it down. A business entirely dependent on the owner, with one big client and messy records, is risky, and should be priced like it.

Get the earnings number right. That matters more than the multiple.

#BusinessValuation #MandA #Acquisitions #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

A valuation multiple is just a risk score.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a simple bar chart, or a calculator on a desk.

Medium import today: how-to-value-a-small-business-to-acquire.html

Weekday 10 . Fri
Proprietary vs intermediated deal flow, in one line:

Intermediated deals come to you. A broker lists a business, runs a process, and buyers compete. Efficient, and the price reflects that.

Proprietary deals are the ones you originate. You found the company. You reached the owner. There is no auction.

Less competition usually means better terms, and often a better relationship, which matters when you are buying something someone spent decades building.

Both have a place. But proprietary flow is where the edge is, and it is the part you actually control.

The deal nobody else knows is for sale is the best deal you will ever do.

#DealFlow #MandA #Acquisitions #SearchFund
↓ screenshot this as the post image

The best deal you will ever do is one nobody else knew was for sale.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a fork in a road, or two doors.

Medium import today: axial-alternatives-for-searchers.html

Weekday 11 . Mon
There is a quiet unfairness in acquisitions.

The tools funds use to source deals are priced like the funds that use them. Many cost more per year than a solo searcher spends on everything else combined.

So for years, the searcher had two options. Pay fund prices you cannot afford. Or do it all by hand and burn the months you do not have.

That gap never made sense to me. The job is not complicated. Map a market. Find the owners. Reach out. The expensive software was solving for teams and integrations a solo buyer does not need.

The data was the same. The price did not have to be.

If you are a searcher, you should not be priced out of the one thing that matters most: finding the deal.

#SearchFund #ETA #Acquisitions #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

Funds pay fund prices to find deals. You don't have to.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a price tag, or a scale weighing two sides.

Medium import today: grata-sourcescrub-serava-comparison.html

Weekday 12 . Tue
The owner cares who takes over. More than you think.

When you reach out to a retiring owner, you are not just making an offer. You are auditioning to inherit something they spent a lifetime building.

A lowball pitch from a stranger gets ignored. Genuine interest in the business, respect for what they built, and a real plan to take care of their team and customers gets a conversation.

Many of these deals are won on trust and fit as much as price. And they take time, so plan to build a relationship, not force a transaction.

The lesson: lead with respect, not a number.

#Acquisitions #SuccessionPlanning #SMB #SearchFund
↓ screenshot this as the post image

You are not making an offer. You are auditioning to inherit it.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: two people talking across a workbench.

Medium import today: how-to-find-and-buy-an-accounting-firm.html

Weekday 13 . Wed
Most acquirers over-buy software and under-invest in outreach.

They will spend hours comparing data platforms and CRMs, and almost no time actually contacting owners.

But the relationship with the owner is the asset. The tools just help you find and remember them.

If you are spending more time choosing software than sending messages, you have it backwards.

The buyer who contacts 300 owners with a messy spreadsheet beats the buyer with perfect software and an empty inbox. Every single time.

Tools are a multiplier of activity. Zero activity times anything is still zero.

#Acquisitions #SearchFund #Sales #SMB

↓ screenshot this as the post image

Zero outreach times perfect software is still zero.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a scale tipping from "software" to "outreach".

Medium import today: family-office-deal-sourcing-tools.html

Weekday 14 . Thu

The deal is usually on the third email, not the first.

New buyers send one message, hear nothing, and assume the owner is not interested.

Most replies come on the second or third touch. The owner was busy, or not ready that week, or just did not get to it. Persistence reads as seriousness.

A simple cadence beats a clever one. Short, specific, human. Then follow up a few times, spaced out, without being annoying.

You are not pestering. You are staying top of mind for the moment the owner is finally ready to talk.

Follow up. Then follow up again.

#ColdOutreach #Acquisitions #Sales #SearchFund

↓ screenshot this as the post image

The deal is usually on the third email.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: an email thread with several follow-ups.

Medium import today: independent-sponsor-deal-sourcing.html

Weekday 15 . Fri

Why acquirers love HVAC businesses:

- Heating and cooling are non-discretionary. Demand holds in any economy.
- Maintenance contracts create recurring, predictable revenue.
- The owner base is aging, so there is a steady supply of sellers.

The catch: the best ones are rarely listed, and the team is the hardest asset to replace.

What to look for: recurring service revenue, a crew that will stay through the transition, and an owner ready to hand it off.

How to find them: map every contractor in your area, get the owners, and reach out. A single metro can hold dozens or hundreds of independent shops.

Durable demand plus a retiring owner base. That is the whole thesis.

#HVAC #HomeServices #Acquisitions #SMB

↓ screenshot this as the post image

Non-discretionary demand, recurring revenue, a retiring owner base.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: an HVAC technician or rooftop units (Unsplash: "hvac technician") ian").

Medium import: re-share an earlier guide, or import a new one I publish this week (I will send fresh URLs).

Weekday 16 . Mon

"How do I find businesses that are not listed for sale?"

I get this question constantly. Here is the entire answer.

You do not wait for them to list. You make a list.

1. Pick one industry and one region.
2. Pull every company that fits. Not ten. All of them.
3. Find each owner and a direct way to reach them.
4. Send short, personal messages. Follow up a few times.

That is it. The owners of the best businesses are not on a marketplace. They are at work, running the company, not running a sale.

Off-market is not a secret. It is just a process most people will not run.

#DealSourcing #Acquisitions #SearchFund #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

You do not wait for them to list. You make the list.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a numbered checklist graphic.

Medium import: import a fresh guide from the next batch (URLs incoming).

Weekday 17 . Tue

You can buy a business with less cash than you think.

Most small acquisitions are financed with a stack, not a single check:

- An SBA 7(a) loan often funds a large share of the price over a long term.
- A seller note covers part of it, paid to the seller over time.
- Your equity injection, which lenders require.
- Sometimes an earnout tied to future performance.

Lenders want stable cash flow that comfortably covers the payments, and a buyer who can run the business.

The reason this matters: the constraint is rarely finding a business. It is structuring a deal you can actually fund. Learn the stack, and more deals become possible.

#SBA #Acquisitions #Manda #SMB #Financing
↓ screenshot this as the post image

You can buy a business with less cash than you think.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: stacked blocks or coins forming a structure.

Medium import: import a fresh guide from the next batch (URLs incoming).

Weekday 18 . Wed

Your thesis should fit in one sentence.

"Profitable HVAC companies in the southeast with an owner near retirement."

That is a thesis. It does two things.

It tells you exactly which companies to pull, so you are working a defined market instead of wandering.

And it makes your outreach credible. When you message an owner and clearly understand their specific business, you sound like a real buyer, not a tourist.

A vague thesis produces a vague list and generic emails that get ignored. A sharp thesis produces a tight list and messages that get replies.

If you cannot say what you are looking for in one sentence, you are not ready to source yet.

#SearchFund #Acquisitions #Strategy #SMB
↓ screenshot this as the post image

If you cannot say your thesis in one sentence, you are not ready to source.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a single highlighted sentence on a page.

Medium import: import a fresh guide from the next batch (URLs incoming).

Weekday 19 . Thu
Healthcare practices are a magnet for acquirers. And competitive.

Dental and veterinary practices combine recurring patients, strong margins, and resilient demand. That is why consolidators are circling them.

So how does an individual buyer win against well-funded platforms?

Speed and trust. Many independent owners are providers near retirement who would rather sell to a person who will care for their patients and staff than to a faceless rollup.

Reach them early, before a broker or consolidator does. Map every practice in your area, find the independent owner-operated ones, and start a real relationship.

The consolidators have money. You can have the relationship.

#Healthcare #DentalPractice #Veterinary #Acquisitions
↓ screenshot this as the post image

The consolidators have money. You can have the relationship.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a dental or vet clinic exterior.

Medium import: import a fresh guide from the next batch (URLs incoming).

Weekday 20 . Fri
The unglamorous truth about buying a business:

It is a numbers game, run with personal messages.

There is no clever hack. No secret list. No tool that hands you a deal. The people who succeed pick a market, build the full list of owners, and contact them, consistently, for months.

The ones who struggle usually have too small a list and too few touches. The ones who win treat sourcing like a system and run it every day.

It is boring. It is repetitive. It works.

If you do the boring thing longer than everyone else, you end up with the business. That is the whole secret, and it is not a secret.

#Acquisitions #SearchFund #ETA #SMB #DealSourcing
↓ screenshot this as the post image

It is a numbers game, run with personal messages.
serava.ai

Alt image idea: a calendar with consistent daily marks.

Medium import: import a fresh guide from the next batch (URLs incoming).

Tip: post around 8-10am or 12-1pm on weekdays for best LinkedIn reach. Reply to every comment in the first hour – it boosts distribution. Re-share your best post as a fresh angle next month.